Williams Resigns His Senate Seat

WASHINGTON - Harrison A. Williams Jr. resigned Thursday from the Senate with an emotional speech to his 99 colleagues, and thus avoided the virtual certainty that he would be expelled for his Abscam activities.

"I have fought a good fight," said Sen. Williams, 62, a New Jer-sey Democrat who held his seat for 23 years. "I have kept the faith, I go out in good health and in good

He had been accused of offering to use his influence in a mining ven-ture in which he had a hidden interest, in exchange for a $100,000 loan from an undercover FBI agent posing as an Arab sheikh. He was sentenced to three years in prison and a $50,000 fine.

Thursday at 2 p.m., at the end of a 23-minote statement, Sen. Williams bade farewell. "I thank the Senate as I announce my intention to resign. I have made that deci-Sen. Williams said. "I feel no stain. I feel strengthened. I thank you all."

Britain to Purchase New U.S. Tridents For Nuclear Force

approved by Mrs. Thatcher's Cabinet on Thursday morning, Defense Minister John Nott told Parliament the Reagan administration was enabling Britain to buy the system on "advantageous" terms for aboot $13.5 billion. He said this would consume less than $1 billion a year of Britain's annual military budget of more than $25

But British critics of the Trident, including most opposition political leaders and some military experts, contend the cost will be much greater and take money away from Britain's steadily shinking con-ventional defenses. Similar controversy followed Mrs. Thatcher's decision in 1980 to buy the smaller, less sophisticated Trident-1, or C-4, system to re-place Polaris. Divisions Muted

Recently, however, a four-mem-ber hierarchy of bishops has muted its divisions in favor of a united cry of anguish over the human suffering. Protests against govern-ment human rights abuses are joined with outrage over leftist vio-lence. The effect has been to soften the church image as a strong critic of the government.

"The church is moving out of the political arena," said a Europe-an diplomat. "It is listening to

But the church acts oo many levels. Priests such as the Rev. Americans Desire Major Changes In Reagan's Budget, Poll Indicates

WASHINGTON — By a 2-to-1 majority, Americans want Con gress to make substantial changes in President Reagan's proposed budget, according to a Washington Post-ABC News poll. Only 30 percent of those interviewed said Congress should enact the budget without much change, compared to 62 percent supporting major change.

The poll, in which 1,672 persons were surveyed from March 3 to 8, also showed that the public is more pessimistic about the economy than at any time since Mr. Reagan's election. People tended to reject Mr. Reagan's call for tax cots and reductions in spending on social programs. One recommendation that appears to be gaining in public sup-port is the deferral or elimination of one or both of the 10-percent decreases in income tax set for this year and next. There are several proposals for such changes in Congress.

More than 40 percent of those polled expressed doubt that Mr. Reagan himself believes his program will help the economy. They said they believed the president cared more about reducing taxes

The leaders already have reached what one source described as a "tentative consensus" to freeze domestic appropriations at fiscal 1982 levels, which would save about $4 billion next year.

Sentiment reportedly is growing to make across-the-board cuts in benefit programs, eliminating or modifying cost-of-living increases. A critical question is whether a freeze might be applied to Social Security benefits, an idea opposed both by Mr. Reagan and House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., Democrat of Massachusetts.

One source said the Republican leaders may recommend $40 bil-lion to $45 billion in deficit reductions, with half or less coming from a variety of tax increases that would not affect the 10-percent tax cuts scheduled for 1982 and 1983. The rest of the savings would come from spending cuts.

To reach a fiscal 1983 deficit that he calculates at $91.5 billion, the president has recommended $56 billion in spending cuts and tax increases. But Congress has indicated that many of those changes are unacceptable.

As Sen. David L. Boren, Demo crat of Oklahoma, said to Mr. Stockman, "I don't think the budget you have submitted has 10 votes in the U.S. Senate and fewer in the

Panel Urges UN Probe of Polish Rights

By Iain Guest nal Herald Tribune

GENEVA — After several hours of tense and angry debate, the United Nations Human Rights Commission has voted to call on the UN secretary-general to order an investigation into the human rights situation in Poland.

The resolution, passed here late Wednesday evening, calls on Secetary-General Javier Perez de Cucliar to appoint an emissary to spend five working days in Poland before reporting back at next year's session of the commission. It is the first such action taken

Krakow Paper Loses Its Liveliness — and Readers — to Martial Law

By Michael Dobbs

Washington Post Service KRAKOW, Poland - Just a few months ago, Krakow's Communist Party daily. Gazeta Krakowska, was perhaps the most sought-after newspaper in Poland. Its lively, often controversial reports made it the symbol of the strivings of Polish journalists for a freer press, and some copies would change hands for as much as 200 times the cover price. Today, following the imposition of tight press controls by Poland's martial-law government, Gazeta Krakowska has reverted to its former mold. No longer is it difficult to find. Huge stacks of the paper pile up at oewspaper kiosks in this ancient university city, unsold, unread and uninteresting.

The man who transformed Gazeta Krakowska from a turgid Communist Party organ into a journalistic legend sat dejectedly in the Kuznice Club, just off Krakow's main square. Sipping tea, Maciej Szumowski, 43, reminisced about "the most beautiful period in my professional life" - the 16 months of relative creative free-dom that ended Dec. 13 with the military crackdown.

Barred From Paper's Offices

The newspaper editor recalled that, on that first Sunday of martial law, he was summoned to a party meeting in Krakow. An official read out a list of those journalists who would not, in the future, be permitted to enter the offices of Gazeta Krakowska.

Mr. Szumowski's name was at the top of the list. For a comple of weeks, Gazeta

Mr. Szumowski says his rela-tions with local officials deteriorated again in the final weeks before martial law. He refused to support the tougher party line and was particularly criticized when he wrote an open letter in support of the president of the Association of Polish Journalists, Stefan Bratkowski, who was expelled from the Communist Party in November because of his reformist views.

The party leadership in Krakow, a city considered a bastion of tolerance, has attempted to find other jobs for journalists dismissed from their posts. Mr. Szumowski himself has been offered a post on Kuznice's monthly theoretical journal. He has not decided whether to accept it. He has remained a member of the Communist Party. If he resigned, he argues, it would provide an additional weapon for enemies of the paper who claim that Gaze-ta Krakowska was never a true party organ, and journalists dismissed from the paper would find it even harder to get new jobs.

But as much as he decries the imposition of martial law, Mr. Szumowski sees some cause for optimism: Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski the Polish leader, is still resisting calls by hard-liners for even greater repression. And the ideological purge has not yet spread to the

Mitterrand Sets Lid on '83 Deficit While Maintaining Priority on Jobs

By Paul Lewis New York Times Service

PARIS - Concerned about rising government spending President François Mitterrand has ordered the government to hold next year's budget deficit to 3 percent of total economie output, about half of current estimates. Mr. Mitterrand gave no indication how he expects to cut current spending plans by that much. Job creation must still be "the only pri-ority," he told the Cabinet, while urging his ministers to question old spending plans and be severe with new ones.

But it is clear both from the president's remarks Wednesday and from several officially inspired articles in the French press that France's Socialist leadership is preparing public opinion for retrench-ment, just one year after coming to power committed to overcoming recession by a big increase in gov ernment spending.

These indications that Francemay be forced to follow a more modest economic policy are important because at the moment it is the only major Western industrial country trying to stimulate growth, and thus one of the few sources of expansionary strength in the world economy.

Minister's Warning

The president issued the cutback order after the French budget min-ister, Laurent Fabius, warned the Cabinet that the government's current spending plans meant that the budget deficit would nearly double next year, reaching about $36 bil-bon.

This compares with an anticipated deficit of $20 billion this year and deficits of $13 billion last year and $5 billion in 1980, the last

British Amnesty Group Picks American Director

The Associated Press LONDON — Janet Johnstone, an American who is a graduate student in political science at the University of California, has been named director of the British section of Amnesty International

The announcement Wednesday followed the withdrawal March 4 of Jeremy Thorpe, the former Liberal Party leader, shortly before he was to take over the job. Miss Johnstone, 36, is a former director of the group's San Francisco office and was acting director of the Brit-ish section before Mr. Thorpe was full year in office of former Presi-dent Valery Giscard d'Estaing. At $36 billion, the 1983 budget deficit would be roughly equiva-lent to 5 percent of likely economic output as measured by the gross national product, Finance Ministry officials said. This year's deficit is planned at 3 percent, compara-ble to the expected deficits in West Germany, Britain and the United States. In practice, however, it may work out higher since few forecasters believe the French economy will grow by 3 percent in 1982, as the government hopes. Officials say that in an increasingly somber world economy, the stimulus the Socialists are giving consumption by increasing the deficit in 1980 and 1981 threatens to worsen inflation and dangerously swell France's trade deficit by drawing in foreign imports. Although demand for goods and services in France has increased as a result of the Socialists' spending, industrialists are proving slow to step up investment in response, ap-parently fearing higher inflation and increased taxes. As a result, the extra purchasing power has tended to drain away on imports of foreign goods.

Many of the social reforms the government has introduced have also increased the cost of doing business, aggravating the trade deficit by making industry less

Besides big increases in the minimum wage and new restrictions on the employment of temporary labor, Mr. Mitterrand last month bowed to union pressure and decreed that companies must contime to pay workers the same salary even though the workweek has been cut from 40 hours to 39. In addition, the minimum annual paid vacation increased from four

London Police Issue Crime Figures by Race

Resters

LONDON — London's police, breaking silence on a sensitive racial topic, have reported that more than half the muggings in the capi-tal last year were committed by blacks.

The report Wednesday was the first time that Scotland Yard has given such figures, based on de-scriptions supplied by victims. There were immediate objections, one being that the figures were based on complaints rather than convictions.

When riots swept a south London district last year, crinics accused the police of provoking the trouble by harassing young blacks. The rules under which the police can stop and question suspects have since been tightened. The head of the policemen's union, Jim Jardine, told reporters Wednesday that a sharp rise in street crime last year resulted from the new constraints.

According to the police figures, robbery and other violent thefts in London rose by 34 percent last year, to a total of 18,763 cases. In 10,399 cases, the assailants were described as nonwhite.

In London, that description could mean blacks of West Indian origin, Indians, Pakistanis and other ethic groups, But evidence of individual cases indicates that the vast majority of the nonwhite muggers were young blacks, either from the West Indies or born in Britain of West Indian parents.

European Council of Ministers, is proposing creation of a perma-nent, high-level framework for im-proving political and economic co-operation and consultation between the European Economic Community and the U.S. govern-

Mr. Tindemans, Belgium's foreign minister, also called in an interview Wednesday for establishment of greater "concertation" between monetary authorities in Common Market member nations,

Expressing a widely shared view among Western European government leaders and other officials who have recently visited Washington, Mr. Tindemans said "it is not isolationism that we fear in the U.S. administration but global unilateralism, in which there is an absence of cooperation and organized consultations."

A senior U.S. diplomatie official, commenting on Mr. Tinde-man's statement, said Thursday that it reflected "continuing frustration among Europeans that Washington is going alone without them, so they are making construc-tive suggestions to involve us more, particularly in an institutionalized way."

U.S. Alters Stand on Test Ban Talks

GENEVA - The United States agreed Thursday to bring other mem bers of the United Nations into preliminary talks on a comprehensiv nuclear test ban treaty.

A U.S. representative, Louis Fields, told the 40-nation disarmament committee that Washington, which previously insisted on limiting the talks to the United States, the Soviet Union and Britain, was ready to join other members of the committee in discussions. If a consensus could be reached on setting up a subsidiary group of the committee to discuss verification procedures under a nuclear test ban, the United States would go along with it, he said.

Murdoch Says Times Papers Won't Shut

From Agency Disputches

LONDON — Australian publisher Rupert Murdoch said Thursday that The Times and The Sunday Times newspapers had been saved from being shut after unions agreed on staff cuts.

Mr. Murdoch threatened a month ago to shut both papers unless the work force was drastically trimmed. "I am happy to say that The Times is saved. Whether it is saved for all time depends of course on economic factors as it does in any business."

He said 360 persons will lose their jobs immediately and by September 1,000 jobs will be cut. The full-time staff of the papers is 2,600.

UN Study Warns West Of Risk of Depression

The Associated Press GENEVA — A UN study has warned that the oext few months may be decisive as to whether the west's economy will recover after wo years of recession or whether it will decline toward a depression with more unemployment than predicted for the year.

The survey, compiled for the JN Economic Commission for Europe, suggested that the risk of a depression would increase if the tight-money policy followed by most Western governments is con-tinued. The 250-page study was re-

"The cyclical downswing in the United States and the increasing incertainty about a quick recovery means that the economic situation in the whole of the ... [European] region is now converging and will add further general downward pressure on the economies of North America and Europe," the survey warned.

Western industrialized countries might therefore find themselves in a dileinma, it said "either to maintain the restrictive stance and consequently allow their economies to glide into a depression" or change the emphasis toward a "gradual but steady expansion."

It said this approach would have to use measures not only to raise demand but "also to support supply in the process of returning to a fuller utilization of resources" to avert accelerating inflation. For now, the survey stated likely to continue although the rising levels For now, the survey said, the reof unemployment are increasing pressures in several countries for a relaxation of economic policies.

It said unemployment will continue to rise in the 13 West European countries under review — Austria, Belgium, Denmark, Finland, France, West Germany, Ireland, Italy, the Netherlands, Norway. Sweden, Switzerland and Britain. Inflation "still shows only a gentle rate of decline, from an average of about 11 percent in 1981 to some 91/2 percent in 1982," it added.

For the United States, it forecast a sharper drop of inflation, from 10½ percent to 7-7½ percent while unemployment was predicted to rise by nearly 9 percent, more markedly than in Enrope. The survey said a weakening of the dollar was possible in the second half of 1982 "if the changes in the current account balances (strengthening in West Germany and Japan, weakening in the Unit-ed States) occur as expected." Such a development "might reduce the impact of the U.S.-European interest rate differential on capital flows and hence on European interest rates," it said.

The survey noted that forecasts of recovery had to be revised repeatedly in the last few months as developments did not correspond to expectations.

This disappointment of expectations ... could have serious con-sequences for the general business climate, and it could have a highly depressing effect on business pros-pects in the longer run," it cau-

Spy in U.S. Reportedly Tried to Stay in the Cold

By Ronald J. Ostrow

Los Angeles Times Service
WASHINGTON — Two government informants have told investigators that convicted spy Christopher J. Boyce tried to resume espionage activities for the Soviet Union during his 19 months as a fugitive from a U.S. prison in Cali-

The informants, Joe and Brett Pratt, are known to have told the investigators that Mr. Boyce proposed to late 1980 that Joe Pratt. younger of the two brothers join the Army and try to get a job with access to top-secret docu-

Mr. Boyce, according to the Pratts, said that the Soviet Union would supply the brothers with a Minox-B camera to photograph the documents and would pay each of them up to $25,000 a month.

As a spy, Mr. Boyce used such a camera in photographing CIA-gathered satellite intelligence information in 1976 and 1977 and selling it through a confederate, Andrew Daulton Lee, to Soviet representatives in Mexico City.

Escape and Recapture

Mr. Lee and Mr. Boyce were convicted of espionage, with Mr. Boyce drawing a 40-year sentence and Mr. Lee a life term. Mr. Boyce escaped in January, 1980, from the U.S. Correctional Institution at Lompoc, Calif., and was recap-tured Aug. 21 in Port Angeles, Wash., reportedly on information supplied by the Pratts.

Mr. Boyce, 29, was indicted Jan. 13 by a U.S. grand jury in Boise, Idaho, along with two coo-

Brett Pratt, U.S. investigators said, participated with Mr. Boyce in some of the bank robberies, and James Pratt, another brother, was with Mr. Boyce on one of the holdups. Along with Joe Pratt, they are expected to serve as key govern-ment witnesses at the Idaho trial of

Mr. Boyce and his two alleged con-federates. Gloria L. White and Calvin L. Robinson. The trial is schedoled to begin March 24.

Mr. Boyce's attorney, William A. Dougherty, said Wednesday that he had oever before heard the Pratts' allegation that Mr. Boyce sought to resume spying for the Soviet Union. Mr. Dougherty ridiculed the idea that one could gain access in a short time to valuable secret information by joining the Army "unless lightning struck."

defendant, Mrs. White, said he had, "no knowledge" that Mr. Boyce sought to resume spying for the Soviet Union.

Justice Department attorneys made a veiled reference to the Pratts' charges in pretrial pleadings filed in Boise earlier this week. Responding to a claim by Miss White that she was being "vindictively" prosecuted, the government attorneys cited information that Mr. Boyce tried to resume espionage activities after escaping from Lompoc.

Panel Votes U.S. Anti-Abortion Amendment

The National Right to Life Committee hailed the action, saying it was "the first time that any full committee of either house of Congress has voted to repudiate legal abortion on demand.

For the N.Y. Times to coax Washington into trying to force Mubarak to treat Menachem Begin as a gentleman-of-goodwill and as a man-of-his-word, requires brainwashing President Mubarak to the point of his denying Anwar Sadat's tragic agony in the strategy of "Begin's dealings": giving Sadat's peace initiative enough momentum to destroy Sadat... giving Sadat enough rope to hang himself!

A visit to Jerusalem, "post-Sadat-today", would only bring on the head of Mubarak the price Sadat has paid for trusting Begin and his signature on the promise for "full autonomy" to the Palestinians in the Camp David accords. For as long as

Palestinian refugees and innocent Arabs born in Jerusalem are exiled from their birthplace and barred from returning to their

U.S. Jury Considers Mix of Money, Love, Jealous Heirs and a Black Bag

All it lacks is a Hercule Poirot to neatly unravel its tangled threads. A jury of 12 townspeople took up the case Thursday after listening to six weeks of complex and often contradictory testimony; its mem-bers must contend with questions that, unlike those in a novel, may remain unanswerable:

He had given up his jnb with Mr. Getty soon after his mar-riage; now he dabbled in the art market, in bankrolling Broadway plays, in consulting on international oil deals, but never full-time.

By 1978, the marriage was in serious trouble. Mr. von Bulow had met another woman, a beautiful, 36-year-old divorcée named Alexandra Isles. Mrs. von Bulow was increasingly at loose ends, spending many of her days in idleness. In April, 1979, Alexandra gave Claus an ultimatum: Leave Martha by Christmas.

On the morning of Dec. 27, 1979, after a night of drinking her own bomemade eggnog, Mrs. von Bulow failed to awake. At 4:30 in the afternoon, Mr. von Bulow sent for the family doctor. The physician immediately sent ber to a hos-

The next morning, Mr. von Bulow was up early and left his wife asleep. When he returned at 11 a.m., he found her unconscious on the marble floor of the bathroom. More than a year later, her physicians say she will probably never regain conscious-ness, although she may live another 20 years.

Mr. von Bulow was accused by the state of Rhode Island of having assaulted Mrs. von Bulow twice, once in 1979 and once in 1980, with a hypodermic needle full of insulin and with the intent to cause her death.

Technically, the case against him revolves around a small black bag. The prosecution says the bag belongs to Mr. von Bulow. The defense says the drugs inside belonged to his wife.

Mrs. von Bulow's German maid. Maria Schrallhammer, says she first discovered the bag in Mr. von Bulow's eloset in February, 1980, two months after Mrs. von Bulow's first, brief coma, It contained three vials of medicine, she said, and she told Alexander and Annie Laurie about it. DURBAN, South Africa - A multiracial commission has concluded that the coastal province of Natal faces worsening racial conflict unless its all-white administration is speedily merged, under black leadership, with that of the Zulu "homeland" called Kwazulu,

The commission's proposals, if adapted, could lead to a dismantling of the basic mechanisms of the apartheid system and turn Na-tal, the South African province with the lowest proportion of whites, into a political laboratory in which new approaches in power-sharing among racial groups could be tested.

The seven-volume report was drafted by white academic specialists and signed by leaders of Natal's sugar industry and Harry F. Oppenheimer Jr., chairman of the Anglo-American Cnrp., South Af-rica's largest mining and industrial

Soviet Marshal Says Whole Country Must Prepare for Conflict

Washington Post Service MOSCOW - Marshal Nikolai Ogarkov, the Soviet chief of staff, has proposed sweeping measures that, in effect, would put the Soviet Union on a war footing to meet what he pictured as a dangerous new U.S. challenge.

In a book published by the Min-istry of Defense, Marshal Ogarkov warned Kremlin leaders against any delay because the Reagan ad-ministration "is now openly making active preparations for a nucle-

He indicated that the armed forces needed new and more powerful weapons in order to confront an aggressive U.S. administration with a strong defense and to be able to "strike a devastating counterblow and destroy the aggressor under any conditions and in any

Marshal Ogarkov's call for total preparedness involved not only the armed forces and military industries but also all sectors of the economy, the party, civil defense and other organizations.

Growing Uneasiness Seen

Western diplomats here said it reflected growing nneasiness among the Soviet military leaders over the Kremlin's relatively conciliatory stance toward President Reagan's policies and his stated quest for strategic superiority over the Soviet Union.

He said the evolution of U.S. strategic doctrine showed that the United States had always entertained the idea of destroying So-cialism. This course has become particularly dangerous in connec-tion with the Reagan administration's confrontational strategy and its direct and all-embracing preparations for war.

The publication of his book would appear to place major questions of strategie doctrine before the leadership, questions that, in turn, involve the allocation of resources at a time when the Soviet Marshal Ogarkov said the Soviet Union made a mistake before World War II, when it pursued a "defensive" strategy. The mistake was "corrected" in 1942, when the Russians established large tank armies in their westward drive. He said a new war would be a cataclysmie confrontation between the two systems — Socialism and capitalism — and that it would quickly engulf all continents.

The nature of nuclear war, Mar-shal Ogarkov continued, required not only preparedness on the part of the armed forces but also similar measures by the entire nation. "In the earlier wars, the question of quick mobilization had not been clearly defined," he said. "The situation is different today. The element of suddenness played a role as early as World War II. Now it strategie importance. The question of a timely switch of the armed forces and the entire economy to a war footing ... [has] become sharply defined.

Deterrence Comes Before Détente

By Richard Halloran New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - Gen. John W. Vessey Jr., nominated to become the senior U.S. military officer on July 1, believes that "America needs to wake up and make up its mind that there could well be a war and to prepare for it."

Then," he told the Association of the United States Army 16 months ago, "there might not be any war at all."

Thus, Gen. Vessey, named by President Reagan to be the chair-man of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, put himself into the ranks of those who advocate deterrence over

That is one of the few clues about Gen. Vessey as a military strategist. He has spent most of his career as a field commander, including time as commanding gen-eral of U.S. forces in Korea. Most recently, he has been out of the spotlight as the Army's vice chief of staff, and Army spokesmen say it is unlikely that he will mittee for confirmation hearings, probably in May. Speeches and Observations

Even so, the few speeches Gen. Vessey has given, along with observations by senior officials, suggest that the general is a plain-spoken man with rather definite ideas "I'm not opposed to good will," he said in his speech to the army of fostering it. But it is a fragile reed upon which to build defense

"We can be weak and hope for peace," he added, "or we can be strong and be sure of peace."

Gen. Vessey sometimes refers to the lessons of World War II. "Pri-or to World War II." he said. "many people in England and the United States considered defense appropriations sufficient — or too

"They weren't dishonest or disloyal," he said. "but they were

"I believe it is precisely that lack of preparation that will tempt our enemies and lead to the very war that we seek to avoid," he said. "I would submit we have no other re-sponsible option than to make rehistic preparations for war."

A policy official indicated that Mr. Reagan selected Gen. Vessey because "he really fits in." The same official referred to the administration's plans for preparing for protracted, conventional, glob-al war as more likely than scattered small conflicts or nucleas

"The short-war logic is compel-ling," said the general, "but I'm not sure the Russians will be smart enough to recognize defeat. Cer-tainly, any study of 1812 and 1941 would lead the student to such a out that Gen. Vessey, 59, is among the few active officers who fought in World War II, with the breadth that conflict gave even those who were young then.

The general worries that military forces have become too dependent on technology. "I'm sometimes concerned that we may not be pre-paring our leaders and commanders for the inevitable chaos of hattle," he said in his speech about the state of the Army.

Technology will not be a substitute for physical and mental toughness of soldiers and leaders," he said. Referring to the dictum that whatever can go wrong will go wrong, he said: "Murphy's law will operate. There will be runners and ssengers in the next battle. weather will preclude aircraft support and some of the lancy things that we are oow fielding will be fixed with gum and wire."

There is little in Gen. Vessey's background to indicate that he knows much about seapower or about the strategic triad of long-range bombers, missiles and submarines capable of delivering nu-clear warheads.

Nor is much known about his views on the proposal hy the cur-rent Chairman of the Joint Chiefs, Gen. David C. Jones, for reform-ing the chiefs, and particularly for strengthening the authority of the

What Is the U.S. Goal?

Things are getting out of hand in respect to Nicaragua. The tone and, according to the latest news reports, the content of President Reagan's approach are getting progressively more threatening. Whether the Nicaraguans are intimidated is not clear. It is evident, however, that Mr. Reagan is moving rapidly toward the outer limit of the support he can reasonably expect from the American people and from this country's friends in the hemisphere. He badly needs to slow down, collect his thoughts and put them out in public view.

There is, we believe, a central ambiguity to the line the administration seems to be taking now, an ambiguity fed partly by design and partly by indecision and careless thinking. Is the American purpose merely to prevent the Sandinista rulers of Nicaragua from imposing on and disrupting the lives of their neighbors? Or is it to put an end altogether to Sandinista rule? The administration has not openly professed that more ambitious second goal, but some of its private words, deeds and plans suggest it wishes to proceed toward it, or to get the Sandinistas to believe it will. In that latter purpose, it has succeeded. The Sandinistas do believe Mr. Reagan intends to try to do them in, and they are mobilizing their considerable diplomatic and propaganda resources to block him.

Should this country try to destroy the Sandinista revolution? The reasons to say yes may be seductive. The Sandinistas are lending themselves to the purposes of foreign countries hostile to the United States. They are double-crossing the many Nicaraguans who accepted their lead in the anti-Somoza struggle. And the more the regime reveals these tendencies, the stronger the temptation in the United States to move, in one way or another, against it. It would, however, be dangerous and wrongheaded to do so. Such an act would cut across the one principle that offers a basis on which the United States has a chance to avert far greater trouble than it has gotten into or even imagined so far. The principle is that of nonintervention. It can never be forgotten that in Latin America, and especially in Nicaragua, the United States is viewed as the Great Intervenor. The right-wing police regimes of the hemisphere may join Washington in an effort, by open or covert means, to change the regime in Managua - but no other Latin government or element will. The substantial support the United States has received for its effort to build reform in El Salvador will inevitably fade away as Washington is seen to be returning to the role of intervenor in Nicaragua. The American public, plenty leery already, would not put up with such inter-vention; nor should it. The ground on which the United States stands as it asks others to oppose Nicaraguan intervention in El Salvador crumbles as the United States sponsors intervention in Nicaragua.

It can be argued that the purpose of the CIA's anti-Nicaragua operations is merely to give the Sandinistas second thoughts about their help in Salvador, not to overthrow them. But you have to be pretty forgetful, or pretty dumb, to buy that argument. Anyway, if there is one thing that the United States has proved itself to be bad at in recent years. it is subverting Latin regimes. There has been no "success" in this department since Guatemala in 1954, and the results there are no advertisement for more of the same.

It follows that before President Reagan goes any further be should clarify the thrust of his policy. He could state that he regards the Sandinistas as bad news, for their international connections and revolutionary ambitions as well as for their represssive domestic proclivities, but that be has decided that in order best to influence them be will forswear an intent to unseat them. Instead, he will bonor the traditional hemispheric ideal of nonintervention and call upon others to join him to ensure that the Sandinista government respects that ideal in its affairs. The means will be hardheaded, legitimate and generally acceptable and will blunt the crippling allegation that he seeks to "intervene."

This will not tie up every loose end of American policy toward Nicaragua. But it will help remedy its central flaw. From the fundamental decision to abandon interventionism, everything else follows.

Mitterrand's View of Latin America Prospects

PARIS — At President Reagan's request.

President François Mitterrand has advanced his planned trip to Washington to Friday. White House talks are expected to focus on relations with the Soviet Union and Central America.

The impression in Paris is that Reagan knows be must soon decide between feuding administration advisers on immediate issues. It is good to hear another allied view at first hand. The West German foreign minister, Hans-Dietrich Genscher was in Washington a few days ago.

Since Mitterrand has earned his anti-Sovisince Mitterrand has earned his anti-sovi-et credentials in Washington's eyes, his ex-planation of why the Europeans will not abandon the Soviet gas-pipeline deal may convince doubters that it is not just a mushy-minded German project. France has already told its nationalized electronics company to make its own rotor blades for pipeline compressors if the United States goes ahead with a threat to deny licenses for the critical General Electric product.

That is likely to strengthen the "multilateralists" in the State Department who argue that it is futile to lean harder on allies, as the Pentagon wishes. But on Central America, the French think the State Department line is driving the United States, and the West, toward serious trouble. There is a good deal of sympathy on the French left for insurgents in El Salvador. Along with French arms sales to Nicaragua, that has provoked angry muttering in Washington. But there are harder heads in the French can't train them on anything else, so that too was seen as a political hint.

government who are just as convinced as the romantic left that a "damage-limiting opera-tion" is required in Central America to save it from the Soviet camp. That is why Paris supports the mediation plan of the Mexican president. José Lopez Portillo, coldly received by Washington.

Encompassing Nicaragua, Salvador and Cuba, the plan is more realistic than the original French-Mexican call for a Salvadoran political settlement.

The background of the $17 million French arms deal with Nicaragua is important in the overall Paris view. Officials say the Nicaraguans simply turned up one day with a shopping list carefully composed of weapons that might be used in an anti-guerrilla or defensive war, but not suitable for eather offensive or guerrilla operations. Since the list is small and does not fit any logical arms buildup program, the French concluded that the request reflected continued debate within the Nicaraguan leadership about becoming over-dependent on So-viet-sponsored supplies. "It was clearly po-litical," said an authoritative French official. Surprisingly, the Nicaraguans also asked about training a few pilots in France. They can't afford French planes and the French

It is noted here that unlike Cuba and Vietnam, Nicaragua has not become a certi-fied member of Moscow's "Socialist camp," and doesn't even have observer status as Ethiopia and Angola do in Comecon, the economic hranch. The French recognize a distinct Managua tilt that way, but argue that threats are most likely to push it over the brink.

The long view is sometimes put very harshly. Upheaval and far-reaching change is inevitable in awakening Central American societies, it goes. Opponents of the existing order are bound to be anti-American, since they see the U.S. as the bulwark of their oppressors. It may be a couple of generations before their hatred subsides.

Sooner or later they will win. Therefore. the aim should be not to drive them into Moscow's arms, which would be a strategic disaster, but to hope that if they go Marxist it will be on Yugoslav terms of real nonalignment, according to the French argu-

This raises the question of Cuba. Fidel Castro's claim to nonalignment is patent balderdash. But it is not clear to what extent his regime is simply a mouthpiece and proxy for Moscow and how far the urge to spread revolution and create regional allies is Probably there is some of both in Havana, Before it can tell the difference, Washington must decide whether it considers both equally unacceptable or whether it can deal with a Marxist regime close to the United States as it deals with China and Yugoslavia, providing it isn't a Soviet ally

The French analysis may be unnecessarily pessimistic, but only if no intermediate solutions can be found. So far, Cuba has said it will only talk with the United States about bilateral issues, and Washington has said it will only talk with Cubs about cutting off support for rebels in the hemisphere.

Mexico's offer to be go-between could at loast clarify possibilities. It is already clear that if the United Stats seeks a military solution in the Caribbean and Central America. it will unify all but the far right in opposition and seriously aggravate relations with European allies. If it continues to bellow and bumble ineffectively, the deterioration will be more gradual but as sure.

Mitterrand will have a lot to say to Reagan, and it should be hoped that he is

A Stronger Alliance vs. Sanctions on Poland

By Henry Owen

WASHINGTON — Little will come from the present allied discussion of sanc-tions. Our allies are as anxious to spare their commercial relations with the USSR as we are to spare our grain trade. So there will be a great allied brouhaha, and not much to show for it - unless Soviet involvement in Poland

This does not mean that we and the allies should not discuss sanctions. But it does suggest that we should not allow this discussion to divert us from a more promising area: mea-sures to enhance allied strength and unity. The Czech takcover in the late 1940s helped to generate allied support for the Marshall Plan and NATO: the Hungarian crisis of 1956 bastened European support for the Common Market and EURATON. The effect of these Western actions was more important and lasting than anything else we did to punish the USSR for its transgressions in Eastern Europe, and the Soviet leaders are probably the first to recog-

No one who bas recently been in Europe can doubt that many Europeans are worried about what is happening in Poland. Austrian Chancellor Kreisky spoke for them when be said that events in Poland had created the most dangerous situation since World War IL The disintegration of the Turkish and Austrian empires in the face of Eastern European uationalism was marked by spreading violence; at least some Europeans whose countries felt the impact of this violence in the late 19th and early 20th centuries are not persuaded that the Russian empire will be an exception.

This prospect does not convince them that sanctions would be useful, but it does persuade them that allied power and cohesion will be more needed than ever in the period that lies ahead. As in the past, U.S. leadership will be essential if this is to be achieved. Three areas of potential progress, each related to the Polish crisis, come to mind:

Defense: Events in Poland dramatize the need for enough NATO conventional force to ensure a balance of usable military power in a potentially unstable continent — without the undue reliance on nuclear weapons that is now proving as politically divisive as it would be militarily suicidal (in the most literal sense of that much over-used word). To get allied agreement on building up conventional forces, the United States would have to resume the draft, or adopt some equally effective action to increase the quantity of its own military man-power. Such a U.S. move could be taken as part of a package that would include Europeau pledges to achieve the targets for increased conventional effort agreed by NATO beads of government at London in 1977.

Political: The Polish crisis has underlined the need for a concerted Western European foreign policy. The best way to meet this need is to create a European Political Community, paralleling the present Economie Community. The United States, stressing that advance consultation is more feasible with a single EC entity than with nine separate EC members, could pledge that it would not take relevant unilateral foreign policy actions without consulting such a Community, if one came into being and thus encourage its construction.

Energy: The French independent newspaper Le Monde is not alone in pointing out that the Polish upheaval dramatizes the risks of depending heavily on Soviet gas supplies, which might be interrupted by a deepening crisis in Eastern Europe. Such European leaders as Chancellor Schmidt have stressed that U.S. pressure to reduce that dependence would be more credible if it were linked to proposals for developing energy alternatives. Administration leadership in seeking passage of pending legis-lation to authorize the States to get on with dredging of U.S. ports to accomodate greater coal exports, coupled with U.S. government encouragement of private U.S. firms in forming joint ventures with European companies to build European plants that could turn this coal into gas, would provide such an alternative, New U.S. and European taxes on oil imports at the same time, generate the needed to improve coal transportation infrastructure on both sides of the Atlantic.

These proposals illustrate the basic point: Specific and useful allied responses to the Polish crisis could be devised that would result in constructive measures to give the alliance greater strength and staying power. But government's attention is now focused almost exclusively on debating sanctions. Private citizens who command confidence on both sides of the Atlantic could redress the balance - by meeting to discuss specific constructive programs, and by offering to belp generate public support for these programs if governments de-cided to move in this direction. The work of Jean Monnet's Action Committee in proposing and supporting the governmental actions that culminate in the Treaty of Rome suggests a useful precedent. The obstacles are greater now. But so is the need.

Your article on the latest SWAPO accusations against South Africa was published under the prominent headline: "SWAPO Accuses South Africans of Killing 15 Namibian Civilians." (IHT, Feb. 26.) Although the article mentions South Africa's denial, the headline does not. The effect on the average reader is obvious.

Meanwhile, SWAPO does more than accusing South Africa: In 1981 95 Namibian civilians (almost all of them blacks) were killed by SWAPO insurgents through assassinations or attacks on local villages. Another 65 were victims of SWAPO landmines. These are not merely accusations, but the trapic proof is there for all to see, And this is without counting the wounded or the number of kidnappings over the past years.

These acts by SWAPO consist-ently meet with a deafening silence at the UN, which is probably the logical result of that organization's partiality in favor of SWAPO. Less understandable, bowever, is why these hard facts never seem to reach the press headlines as easily

BOSTON — Five reputable physicians, after experiments covering six years, believe they have not only scientifically proved the existence of the human soul, hut even that they have actually found it. They assume that it must consist of some form of matter, as the tests appear to show that it weighs from half an ounce to one ounce. The doctors weighed patients immediately before and after death upon scales having a sensitiveness of less than one-tenth of an ounce. The tests were carried out on persons of both sexes. Dr. Duncan MacDougall, who led the experiments, states that full allowance was made for bodily secretions and moisture, but that all tests apparently confirmed the existence of the soul.

BERLIN - At Dortmund Adolf Hitler addressed a meeting of 16,000 and announced that a vital decision must be the outcome of the presidential election: "Shall we or shall we not stamp out internationalism, democracy and pacifism in Germany?" he asked, "I am the chief," cried Hitler in one of those mystic moods that carry his listeners off their feet. "I am youth, I am the future: Hindenburg is the past. Only I am capable of saving Germany. I have traveled west and east, south and north, in Pomerania, Silesia, Saxony. Thuringia and the Rhineland and I have forged a new Germany." His words were lost in the shouls of the crowd, which cheered the meaningless torrents of words.

A Radical Therapy Method

New York Times Service PHILADELPHIA — Donna was 21, she lived with ber parents and two sisters in a big house in the suburbs of an ftalian city. and she had had anorexia nervosa since age 13. Her parents had taken her from doctor to doctor. Fi-nally, one suggested that the fami ly consult a team of therapists who had been experimenting with a new kind in treatment that produced rapid results with previously

The team was practicing a form of family therapy notable for its innovative techniques and its im-plications for traditional therapeutie practice. Termed revolutionary by some of the field's best known practitioners, it has been criticized others, and has been the subject of intense discussion and widespread imitation recently among family therapists worldwide.

The therapists first interviewed Donna's whole family, then invited the parents to attend a second session, alone. "I must have you do something that will be very, very difficult," said one of the two therapists, "and you must realize that there is no room for error."

The parents were told to wait a few days, then sneak out of the house one night, just before din-ner, without telling anyone. They were to leave a nute on the kitchen table that said simply, "Tonight we are out." They could go any place friends would not encounter them. What the parents did, and its connection with the therapists, would remain a secret. When the parents returned, after 11 p.m., they were to answer all queries from family members by saying, "This business concerns only the two of us."

With trepidation, the parents stole away and left the note. They returned to find that Donna and her two teen-age sisters had hardly missed them. Donna, in fact, had scrounged around and made her sisters dinner — something she had never done before — and the anorexic Donna had even eaten

Appetite Gain

As they had been ordered to, the parents left three more evenings during the next five weeks, before seeing the doctors again. By then, Donna's appetite had picked up. After several more sessions, by which time the parents had spent an entire weekend away from home, Donna had completely ceased ber anorexic behavior. A few months later, she moved out of the house and soon began dating young men for the first time.

The family's therapist was Mara Selvini Palazzoli, who works with her colleague, Giuiana Prata, at the Center for Family Studies in Milan. Since 1972 Palazzoli and her associates have been evolving a radically different form of family

In the United States, Milan-style therapy, as it is called, is being em-ployed in New York, California, Massachusetts, Wisconsin, Georgia, New Jersey and Alabama;

in West Germany, the Nether-lands, Canada, Britain, Belgium

Palazzoli and Prata presented their latest experimental work, in-cluding the case history of "Donna." at a three-day conference held recently by the Family Therapy Training Center of the Philadel-phia Child Guidance Clinic. The audience of 800 greeted Palazzoli with rapt attention and skeptical questions during the "trialogue" between the Milan researchers and two eminent figures in U.S. family therapy, Carl Whitaker and Salva-

"I think Mara's research is tre-mendously important," said Whi-taker, 70, a professor of psychiatry at the University of Wisconsin. "We need someone like her to de-velop the state of the art, and I'm very impressed with her work."
Family therapists focus on the emotional life of an entire family, rather than on one member who have been labeled "the patient." Couples, or entire families spanning grandchildren to grandarents, may visit the therapists. . "Our own technique is quite powerful and radical in a number of ways," said Palazzoli. "The dan-ger is that it may be widely misun-derstood and misused by thera-pists who practice it carelessly."

Tield le Torn'

"Our field is torn now," com-mented H. Charles Fishman, a psychiatrist who is director of training at the Philadelphia clinic. Many practitioners are confused. They've heard about the Milan techniques and they wonder whether to experiment with them. We hope our conference will help to clarify some of these issues."

In Milan-style practice, two therapists sit in a room with the family while two others observe behind a one-way mirror. The sessions last an hour, and are repeated at long intervals - at least a month apart. Typically, families are seen for 10 sessions. "The reorganization of the family system is slow," said Palazzoli.

A crucial element of the therapy is the reading of a "paradoxical prescription" to the family. After the hour session, the family is directed to a waiting room, and the four therapists adjourn to figure out a prescription suited to the family's problem. The therapists then invite the family in again and read them a message, or give them a task or ritual to perform.

The families, Palazzoli explained, are given a sympathetic restatement of their situation and encouraged not to change it. Finding themselves in this therapeutic double bind (by not changing they are obliged to follow the unpalatable orders of the therapist, but by resisting the therapist they have to change) many of the families have regrouped in bealthier ways.

leagues developed their ideas in an influential book, "Paradox and Counterparadox." The paradox, she said, is the unhealthy situation or repetitive pattern that may have trapped a family in a no-win situation but is necessary for its cohesiveness. "Our interventions are the counterparadox."

Central to her concept of treating the family, she said, are the theories of the late anthropologist Gregory Bateson. He posited that biological systems and social systems are self-maintaining organisms that strive for constancy in the face of change. When threatened by new realities, however, systems — including family sys-tems — can adapt and alter their basic structure, evolving to higher levels of complexity that permit them to survive.

Team Approach

Formerly an internist and psychoanalyst, Palazzoli began study-ing new therapentic procedures in May, 1967. Ten years ago she conbarked on her experim approach with Prata and the psy-chiatrists Luigi Boscolo and Gianfranco Cecchi

Some critics dismiss the paradoxical prescriptions as nothing more than reverse psychology. Palazzoli believes that the hypothesis and the interview method can be more important than the actual gimmick of the prescription. In 1978 Boscolo and Cecchin left the group to teach their techniques. Palazzoli and Prata have continued to evolve their theories as a two-therapist team. Although they employ the full variety of their paradoxical techniques, they are now experimenting with pres-cribing only a single, fixed mes-sage: the one encouraging the par-ents to secretively spend time away from their children.

'Powerful Prescription'

"This is a very powerful prescrip-tion," said Palazzoli. "The idea of the 'secret' gives us a fundamental pact with the parents as co-thera-Dists." Because families may leave Milan-style therapy irritated or confused, studies of the "cure rates" of patients are even more conjectural than those in traditional therapeutic approaches. Criticism of the Milan therapy has focused on its manipulative aspects. "It is impossible not to manipulate families," Palazzoli countered. "You manipulate the family or they manipulate you - and if they're doing that, your patients just will not get well."

Others in the field are dubious about the superiority of the Milanstyle methods. "ft's an interesting research approach," said Minu-chin, 60, a family therapy pioneer who is training director emeritus of the Philadelphia clinic. "Mara is Inree other key elements of the therapy are a rigorous method of developing hypotheses about the nature of the family patterns; a strict ocutrality toward all family members; and a special interview

Miriam Makeba's 'Realist' Songs

By Jacqueline Trescott

Washington Past Service
WASHINGTON — Almost W two years ago, the singer Mirism Makeba, whose lyries and life reflect Third World struggles, performed in Lesotho. That appearance in a nation locked in by her country of birth, South Africa, was the closest she has been to her home in more than 20 years.

"It felt good, for a change, to address an audience in your own language. Of course there was also a sadness, when you look across the border and realize that is the border and that our umbilical cords are buried on the other side. It was kind of a sweet-and-sour celing," she recalled.

Makeba, who prefers to be called a "realist" rather than a "protest singer," was in Washing-ton for a performance with the jazz drummer Max Roach at the Kennedy Center. This, part of her first ncert tour of the United States in 10 years, was organized and produced by the New York-based South African Students Union. It was her strong allegiance to the students that prompted her return to a country that once rejected her and her politics.

"The students certainly didn't need to convince me to return, as a mother, as an artist. They need my help, they can bave it," said Makewhose South African citizenship was revoked after her appearance in an anti-spartheid film. She spoke in whispers, more from travel fatigue than from hesitation.

all of a sudden concerts were gone, records disappeared," Makeba said. "I decided not to fight — to concentrate where I didn't have coyness that usually doesn't surface in her conversations.

"I don't know about this birthday. I think I should slow down," she said, langhing. Makeba, who lives in Guinea, spends more than half the year touring and is finishing work on a film about South Afnica. There are few signs of age in her small, tant face, framed by gold-decorated braids. In "West Wind," Makeba sings:

Make us free from exploitation and strife Because nothing is more precious

West wind with your splendor take my people by the hand
Spread your glory sunshine, Mother
Africa, unify my precious land."

When she lived in the United States in the 1960s, she was already an internationally known singer. She introduced the South African languages and legends of the Xhosa and Zulu in vibrant, haunting songs. Her departure in 1968 coincided with her marriage to the black power activist Stokely Carmichael, now called Kwame

"I had decided to leave anyway because I felt I was missing Africa. I had been away from Africa 10 years, long enough. But at the same time, I married Stokely and down any city, any government, like they were saying. We were just two people who wanted to be together and somehow, unfortunate-any harassments or any problems, where I could just perform."

Reflecting on the political at-mosphere of the times, she asked, "What did it do? We didn't bring

EEC Weighs Move

BRUSSELS — The European Economic Community is moving closer to taking action against Japan under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade to reduce the EEC's trade deficit, EEC sources said Thursday.

Senior officials of EEC nations Thursday discussed taking action against Japan under a GATT article allowing a member that feels impaired by another to seek compensation.

The EEC's 1981 trade deficit with Japan totaled $10.3 billion. The community has welcomed recent Japanese moves aimed at opening Japan's market to European goods but warned that more must be done to ward off protectionist sentiment in Europe.

The United States also has been complaining about Japan's curbs on U.S. access to the Japanese market.

No final decision on any EEC action against Japan has been made yet, the sources said. They said France and Italy believe such action would be too time-consuming. Last month the two countries voiced the same objection at an EEC foreign ministers meeting.

A 25-member Japanese delegation is expected to arrive in Brussels Saturday for a feur-day visit to explain Japan's import policies to EEC and Belgian officials. A Japanese Embassy spokesman said Thursday in Brussels that the delegation includes nine members of the Liberal Democratic Party of Premier Zenko Suzuki.

The group, headed by Massumi Esaki, a former Cabinet minister, visited the United States last month and will visit London, Paris and Bonn after Brussels, the embassy spokesman said.

Royal Dutch Shell Says Recession Cut Profit

LONDON - Royal Dutch/Shell said Wednesday that a slight drop in profit for 1981 was attributable to the deepening recession, higher taxation and the impact on oil product markets of the appreciation of the

The company said that particularly in the first half, group companies were handicapped by a considerable crude oil cost disadvantage compared with competitors with substantial access to Sandi Arabian crude. It said group companies outside North America achieved a significant improvement in the manufacturing, marine and marketing sectors in the second half of 1981.

Cadbury Schweppes Sees Profit Progress

LONDON — Cadbury Schweppes, reporting a 3 percent after-tax profit increase for 1981, said Wednesday that the rise and expectation of further progress this year reflect long-term strategies determined five years ago.

Chief executive Basil Collins told a press conference the group's growth policies continue to aim at concentration on international brands, capital spending on modernization and further restructuring.

A company spokesman said 1982 capital spending should exceed £70 million, after £77 million last year and £57 million in 1980. Company spokesmen said the group plans to increase its output while sharply cutting its British plant space.

Britain Approves Shell Pipeline for Scotland

LONDON — British Energy Minister Nigel Lawson has anthorized Shell UK to build a 20-inch-diameter, 135-mile pipeline to carry natural gas fiquids in Scotland, the Department of Energy said Thursday.

The line, which will greatly expand the capacity of the British petrochemical industry, will run from the St. Fergus onshore gas terminal to a plant at Mossmorran, Fife, the department said.

Natural gas from the Brent offshore field will be landed at St. Fergus, where the methane will separated for supply to the British Gas Corp.

The automaker did not reveal the expected cost of the recall. GM said the hose clamps on these autos could break resulting in fuel leakage during refueling. Fuel also could spill over while driving if the level is

Pöhl, in U.S., Supports Volcker's Efforts

GAINS

New York Times Service NEW YORK - Karl Ono Pohl, the president of the Bundesbank, is in the United State: in an unusual role: A diplomat seeking to reduce some of the strain in relations between the governments of the two countries.

He said in an interview Wednesday that for many years he had had excellent relations with U.S. financial leaders, so he hoped that his visit could achieve its purpose.
"I am afraid of this cooling off in American-European relations."

Mr. Pohl said.
Considering that Arthur F.
Burns, formerly Mr. Pohl's counterpart at the Federal Reserve Board in Washington, is now U.S. ambassador to West Germany, a seems somewhat less unusual than it might have two years ago.

Mr. Pohl said that he would meet with Secretary of the Treasury Donald T. Regan and Paul A. Volcker, chairman of the Fed.

[A spokesman for the Federal Reserve Bank of New York said Thursday that Mr. Pohl met its president, Anthony Solomon, for private discussions Wednesday, Reuters reported from New York. Thursday he was to hold talks at the Institute for International Economics, and Friday he was to that interest rates will stay as high meet with Mr. Volcker and Mr. as they are," he said.

Throughout the wide-ranging in-terview, Mr. Pöhl spoke warmly of the United States, and in sharp contrast to recent statements by West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, the central banker carefully avoided any strong criticism of U.S. policies.

Mr. Schmidt has warned that, as result of high interest rates in the United States, the world could be plunged into a depression. More-over, the chancellor has contended that the projected U.S. budget deficit will produce higher interest rates and more economic problems . throughout the world.

Mr. Pöhl suggested that Mr. Schmidt's caustic comments about the United States might have reflected the pressure the chancellor has been under from the left wing of his own party, the Social Demo-crats. Mr. Pohl said he thought the public remarks about U.S. policy were not necessary.

He said the Bundesbank was "in full agreement with Mr. Volcker." And while Mr. Schmidt has warned that the projected U.S. deficit would produce higher interest rates and more economic problems throughout the world, Mr. Pöhl predicted that interest rates would decline. "I can't imagine

U.S. Again Warns Canada To End Investment Curbs

By Jane Seaberry

Washington Past Service WASHINGTON - The Reagan administration has renewed warnings that it may retaliate against Canada if discussions to eliminate trade and investment barriers do

"This administration has not and will not sit by idly and watch our companies and businessmen bear the brunt of costly and inequitable restrictions in the Canadian market," an assistant commerce secretary, Raymond J. Waldmann, told a Senate subcommittee Wednesday.

"I might also point out that should our bilateral or multilateral efforts to eliminate discriminatory Canadian practices fail, then we will proceed to explore the merits of pursuing unilateral measures available under U.S. law," Mr. Waldmann said. He cited a provision allowing the government to initiate an investigation that could give the president broad powers of

"We must, of course, proceed cautiously in this regard, first to ensure that we do not do damage to U.S. interests in taking such action, and second to ensure that we do not do harm to the international trading system," Mr. Waldmann added. A Canadian Embassy spokes-man in Washington said Mr. Waldmann's statements were "strange when we're involved in a GATT consultation to resolve the complaints about our investment practice. We are committed to seeing the GATT consultation and any GATT action through. At that point the Commerce Department would start talking about applying any unilateral actions."

Mr. Waldmann and other administration officials complained about Canada's Foreign Investment Review Agency, which screens foreign investment and imposes export quotas, import ceil-ings and other requirements.

Russian Gold Sale 60 Tons in Month, Haig Tells Panel

WASHINGTON - The Soviet Union sold 60 tons of gold in January, U.S. Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. told a Senate

BUSINESS NEWS BRIEFS British Banks Reduce Base Lending Charges

Reuters

LONDON — British banks cut their base lending rates half a percentage point to 13 percent Thursday, continuing a cautious down-ward trend in interest rates in Western Europe.

In Stockholm, the Bank of Sweden announced a reduction in its discount rate, the fee on loans to banks, to 10 percent from 11 per-cent. The central bank said the cut was an effort to spur domestic in-gradual decline of interest rates in the United States and reflect political pressure to stimulate econoif it can be done without seriously weakening exchange rates.

Building societies were ex-pected to lower the rates Friday. The pound held steady on foreign exchange markets after the rate cuts were announced, edging up to $1.8105 in London trading from Wednesday's $1.8103. The Financial Times industrial share index jumped 8.4 points to

Asked about the U.S. budget deficit, Mr. Pohl said it would be inappropriate for him to comment on the administration's fiscal policies. But he also said that "central banks are not the only ones re-sponsible for interest rates." Other factors, he said, include fiscal and wage and incomes policies.

Mr. Pöhl entbusiastically praised Mr. Volcker. Many U.S. economists who describe themselves as monetarists, including Beryl Sprinkel, undersecretary of the Treasury, have praised the Bundesbank for the way it runs it monetary policy but criticize Mr. Volcker for allowing the U.S. money supply to fluctuate too widely over short periods.

Auto Union to Resume Negotiations With GM

DETROIT — The United Auto Workers union said Thursday that it had decided to resume contract talks with General Motors here Friday morning.
The scheduled talks represent the third attempt to reach agree-ment on GM demands that the union accept measures to cut labor costs. The UAW recently agreed to a contract with Ford Motor requiring the union to make significant rates, contending that the high level of borrowing costs is delaying world economic recovery. Five major U.S. banks earlier this week cut their prime lending rates half a percentage point to 16 percent, but other big American banks are still charging 16½ percent.

U.S. interest rates may drift down over the next few months because of weakness in the U.S. economy, analysts say, bot there is concern that heavy government borrowing will push them up

Meanwhile, West Germany's Bundesbank is believed to be considering a further cut in its Lombard lending rate from 10 percent, and analysts said the prospect of lower U.S. rates might encourage such a move. In Zurich, specula-tion persisted Thursday that the Swiss National Bank will soon cut its key rates.

Bendix had said Monday that it had acquired more than 5 percent of RCA's shares and that it might buy as much as 9.9 percent. Bendix has given no indication about when it purchased the RCA shares.

RCA was the second most actively traded issue on the New York Stock Exchange Wednesday, closing at $20.50, up 50 cents a share, on volume of 1.27 million shares. At that price, Bendix's holdings are worth about $112.7 million. As recently as a week ago, RCA was trading in the $17-a-

Alfa of Mexico, Bankers Discuss Company's Debts

MEXICO CITY — Alfa Group, Mexico's largest private conglom-erate, is conferring with bankers about restructuring part of its me-dium- and long-term foreign debt, a company spokesman said Thurs-

The spokesman denied reports that Alfa might declare a moratori-um on its foreign debt of more than $2 billion. He said Alfa is consulting "with some foreign banks" about the possibility of delaying payment on a portion of the principal owed on medium- and long-term debt. He declined to identify the creditors involved.

Last month, following the peso devaluation, Alfa sent a note to creditors asking for a two-week grace period on servicing its debt, but the note was withdrawn four days later without any reason being given.

The Mexican government recently agreed to loan the company 17 billion pesos ($373 million). To raise additional cash to pay its short-term debt, the company sold three large subsidiaries in the latter half of 1981, the spokesman said. He said Alfa's foreign short-term debt was "between a fourth and a third of the total owed to banks abroad."

U.S. Executives Foresee Drop in Capital Spending

WASHINGTON — U.S. business executives are scaling back spending plans for expansion this year, with inflation-adjusted capital spending now estimated to decline 1 percent from 1981. the Commerce Department reported Thursday.

Such a decline would be the first since 1974. But inflationadjusted, or real, spending for new plants and equipment rose only 0.1 percent last year, a statistic the report described as "about the same as in 1980."

In a January version of the same government spending survey, executives running non-farm businesses estimated real capital spending this year would decline about 0.5 percent.

The Reagan administration has been hoping that spending for business expansion would help pull the nation out of recession. But continuing high interest rates, which make borrowing to support such spending expensive here stifled expansion.

Oil Glut Is Evaporating, Some Experts Believe

By Bhushan Bahree

AP-Dow Jones

LONDON — Some experts are beginning to see an end to the oil

This view has taken hold in industry circles in the past week or two. "Only 10 days ago, my answer would have been different," said an official for a major international oil company who now ex-pects that the glut will end by late Summer or early fall

The experts, from both industry and official organizations, reason that a fairly heavy drawing down of inventories by oil companies has almost run its course. Even the slightest rise in demand would require a replenishment that, because of the method of inventory assessment, would exceed the actu-al increase in oil use, the experts

Moreover, the economies of industrial countries are expected to revive somewhat, if only because oil prices are lower and political attention is shifting from inflation to unemployment.

Some prominent members of OPEC recently stressed that they expected a turnaround in the market by summer. Kuwait's oil minister. Sheikh Ali Khalifa al-Sabah, for instance, said earlier this week, "It's a matter of waiting it out for three months." If OPEC countries can "wait nut" the glut, they can maintain the current OPEC benchmark price of $34 a barrel.

Support for the Knwaiti minis-ter's view is coming from the Paris-based International Energy Agency. The oversupply now totals only about 2 million barrels a day, an IEA official estimated.

Oil companies calculate invento-

OECD Gathering Sharply Divided On Export Credit AP-Dow Jones

PARIS — Representatives of 22 Western industrial nations ended a two-day meeting here Thursday without agreeing on new guidelines for government-backed ex-port credits. The present arrangement expires May 16.

HOW I COMMITTED SUICIDE A Reverie

By C.L. Sulzberger. 216 pp. $11.95. Ticknor & Fields, 52 Vanderbilt Ave., New York, N.Y. 10017.

Reviewed by Christopher Lehmann-Haupt

THERE is one obvious thing about suicide that C.L. Sulzberger, retired New York Times foreign affairs columnist, does not mention in his "reverie," "How I Committed Suireverse." How I Committed Stil-cide," a fantasy about what it would have been like if be had done so — though of course he didn't. That obvi-ous thing is imagining how sorry peo-ple are going to be when you have done away with yourself. If only you could attend your own funeral and watch them weeping. How they would wish you were shill alive.

The reason Sulzberger does not mention such self-pity mixed with anger as a motive for suicide is because it quite clearly played no role in his own fictional self-destruction. The obvious reasons he gives for choosing to kill himself and his beloved beagle, Christopher, are these: The death of his wife, Marina, in 1976 and the consequent loneliness; his "mandatory' retirement for reasons of age" (65) from The New York Times in 1977, which deprived him of a way to lose himself in his work; and the sense he felt that he had outlived his era. "How right Donne was, I thought," when he wrote, "Mee thinks I have the keyes of my prison in mine owne hand, and no remedy presents it selfe so soone to my heart, as mine own sword" - "except it was mine own gun and not my

The latent reason, to judge from the book, would seem to be a fair amount book, would seem to be a fair amount of self-loathing for not having made more of his life: "I suffer increasingly from insomnia (as well as introspection). The combination made me suddenly realize with horror that in all my long life I had never done a single thing of which I could be geruinely propod; no act of true converge teneral. proud: no act of true courage, gener-osity, sacrifice, or even pure kindness. It is appalling to contemplate — which I did."

"Christopher and I had had a good life — enthusiastic, generous, and tender. . . But I — apart from the blessing of Maxina and the children had wasted life, only tasting it, ob-serving others. My sole accomplish-ment was now about to happen — a well-conceived death, fine dying."

I even doubt that self-pity or anger were motives for Sulzberger's writing "How I Committed Suicide." He wrote it to meditate on death and suicide, to recall what the wise men of the ages have written on the subjects, and to remember what the great men he interviewed had told him about death. He wrote it as an expression of affection for his companion, Christo-pher Beagle, so named because a dog of a beagle's length needs a slightly stretched-out name, and because this particular specimen, "even as a pup-py, bore a remarkable facial resem-blance to a Greek Orthodox saint, Saint Christopher Cynocephalus, of whom two portraits appear on icons in the Byzantine Museum in Athens and two others on icons in Moscow's Tretyakov Gallery."

Finally, he wrote the book to fill up his empty time and to find a use for the travel-diary notes he continued to take out of a habit developed during 40 years of globe-trotting and interviewing for his newspaper column.

Nor can I say that a sense of the self-pity of "How I Committed Suicide" was among my stronger reactions to the book. No, what I felt was mixture of many other emotions delight, puzzlement, magnetism, bore-dom and irritation. I felt delight at the frankly sentimental portrait of Chris-topher Beagle, even when it waxes faintly lugubrious: "Paw in hand, we prepare to face this nothingness to-gether." I felt puzzlement over whether the narrator really has the right to take Christopher's life along with his own. After all, though Sulzberger is certain that, considering the animal's devotion, it would not be right to abandon him to a life without his master, elsewhere he concedes that he can oever know the dog's real feel-

Odd bits of Lore

I felt magnetized by some of the many odd bits of lore that Sulzberger records while rattling around Europe and visiting old acquaintances inside account of the July, 1944, plot to assassinate Hitler, told by a young conspirator who was caught and imprisoced but escaped execution; or Milovan Djilas' reflections on fishing that Sulzberger wrote down while vis-iting the Yugoslav dissident: "I think if I didn't fish with such enthusiasm I would oot have rebelled against the central committee. My thoughts be-came clarified as I fished. My individuality and integrity developed. Subconsciously I changed."

I felt bored by the droning tone of many of Sulzberger's diary entries. And I felt irritated by his not having bothered to edit his book even to the extent of removing the repetitions.

All the same, despite Sulzberger's avoidance of self-pity, some part of me felt sad that Sulzberger was doing away with his life. And when, in the final paragraphs of the book, he blows "the head off my beloved Christo-pher" and pulls the trigger on himself, even found myself wondering, as one always does when one hears about a suicide, if there was ever any small thing I myself could have done to interfere with the act. So when I closed "How I Committed Suicide" and looked at the happy photo of the man and the dog on the back of the dust jacket, with the caption underbeath, reading "C.L. Sulzberger and Christopher are alive and well in Greece," a tiny voice spoke up inside my head, and whispered, "Isn't this having it both ways?"

BRIDGE

ONE of the most bewildering areas for the average player is the bid in the opponent's suit. When made directly over the opening bid, it can have — by agreement — a wide assortment of meanings: the upper unbid suits; the top and bottom unbid suits; two suits of the same color; a big unspecified hand; or even natural, with length and strength in the enemy

.At later stages below the game-level, the bid is usually a vague sug-gestion that game should be reached. But it can be a natural attempt to play in the enemy suit, especially when the opponents are doubling repeatedly for penalties, or if the bidder has been si-

There is one auction that most average players would treat as a cue-bid, but that most experts regard as natural: One club. Pass. One heart. Two

To enter the bidding in a balancing position when both opponents have bid and your left-hand opponent is known to have five cards in your suit might appear suicidal. Few players, even experts, do such a thing in a bridge lifetime. This makes South's action on the diagramed deal rash and ridiculous or brilliant and imaginative depending on your viewpoint. Since it succeeded, the more complimentary adjectives seem to be appropriate.

York events for the past two years, we may conclude that his ventures are profitable. He reported this episode in the Greater New York Bridge Associ-ation's Post Mortem, an excellent publication skillfully edited by Barry Paul, also of New York.

By Alan Truscott

After a forcing one oc-trump re-sponse to one heart, East-West came sponse to one heart, East-west came to rest in two diamonds, a contract that could have succeeded for a good score. They might have done even better if South had re-opened with a double, for North would no doubt have ble, for North would no doubt have passed. Bot Lowenthal impertinently bid two hearts, a natural attempt to play in West's known five-card suit. He thought it likely that his partner held at least two hearts, inasmuch as East would tend to give a preference to hearts if he held a doubleton.

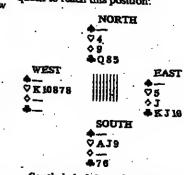

West's double was foolish, since his hearts and his hand were no better than he had indicated. He led his singleton club, and South worked out the distribution correctly. East would have bid one spade with four of them; so, West's pattern had to be 4-5-3-1.

Accordingly, South rose with the ace in dummy, led to the diamond ace and played a small spade. He thought it likely that West held the ace queen and was become with the second. and was happy when the queen appeared on his left. West would have done best to shift to the trump king, saving a trick in dramatic fashion, although not defeating the contract. In practice, be led a diamond, and South ruffed and played another spade. West woo with the ace and played his last diamond for South to ruff.

South cashed the spade king and ruffed his last spade with the trump queen to reach this position:

South led clubs twice, end-playing West twice and scoring an overtrick. Lowenthal now claims that it helps to have the trumps break five-one, at any rate when the strong opponent has tha five. He concedes that he would not have done well in clubs, with five trumps in the hand of the weak opponent.

Andrea Leand returning a shot to Billie Jean King last week in Los Angeles.

Leand and the Minis of Tennis

New York Times Service

NEW YORK - Every week there are more of them — Billie Jean's spiritual granddaughters. They struggle into the satellite tournaments or they blast right into the major circuit, the way Andrea Leand did last week. Maybe they are even too young to remember King's maiden name or her prime-time opera buffa match with Bobby Riggs, but they are old enough to swing a racket and get on an airplane by themselves.

"We call them 'minis,' " says

Barbara Potter, all of 20, one of the leaders of this winter's wom-en's tennis tour. "It seems that every week there's another mini."

Leand, 18 years old and 5 feet 8 inches tall, is almost too old. and too imposing to be a mini. But there she was in Los Angeles last week, in her first tournament as a pro, knocking off 14-year-old Kathy Rinaldi — last summer's mini — and 18-year-old Claudia Kohde before running into Grandma King herself Friday night.

Golden Age Dawning King, 38, who entered the tournament at the last moment while visiting her parents in Long Beach, prevailed over Leand in a tiebreaker, 3-6, 6-0, 7-6. Later she said: "I think I aged 20 years because she ran me around the court all night."

The arrival of Potter into the top eight and Leand into the major circuit makes it appear that the golden age of female tennis is only just now emerging. In the 1970s, which seemed to be golden, there was usually one acknowledged champion and a few challengers.

In the 1980s, the minis are attacking from all sides - as intennis rats of the last decade, who affected the grunting of Connors, the swagger of Gerulaitis and the ponytail of Vilas. The minis have been taught by Grandma King, even if subliminally, that it's all right to aspire.

"Billie Jean bas done a lot for women's tennis," Leand says.

Stunned Pride

Leand's paved road included Princeton University, the only school to which she applied. She wanted to major in political science and play tennis for Princeton and prepare to be a profes sional all at the same time.

But excellence caught up to her months before she had expected it. Last summer she was given a last-moment spot in the U.S. Open, and she toppled Renee Richards, Andrea Jaeger and Julie Harrington before running into Potter in the fourth

As she staged her rampage at Flushing Meadows, her parents observed with what seemed to an outsider to be stunned pride. They had given her tennis les-sons, watched her win the Maccabiah tournament, cheered as she advanced in major junior tournaments. But they also wanted her to go to coilege.

"Money is not a factor here," Dr. Paul Leand said last September. We all feel some girls have turned professional too soon. But I also know it is very hard to do two things well at the same time

Andrea arrived at college several days late, because of the open, and "fell in love with Princeton," she said recently. "I have three roommates in a quad dormitory. I enjoy staying up until 2 and 3 o'clock doing homework. I loved my psychology classes, reading about Freud, three-hour labs." Her fall schedule also included a 9 a.m. Spanish class — myself and 12 football players," she says. "I guess we all wanted to get our classes as early as possible so we could practice in the afternoon."

She was part of Louise Gen-gler's Princeton tennis squad, and she studied tennis with Fred Stolle as well as with Richards, who, as Richard Raskin, had once played on the Yale tennis team with Dr. Leand.

Help From Richards "Rence helped me a lot before my match against Andrea Jaeger," Leand recalls. "General things like being consistent but aggressive, serving well, staying in the point until I got the righ shot, using my power to my advantage."

Still an amateur, Leand en-nents when ber Princeton schedule permitted. In the first, in Chicago, she advanced to the quarterfinals against Martina Navratilova, who is coached by Richards.

After a service break, Leand took a 3-2 lead in the third and deciding set. But as Leand re-calls, "I missed a few first serves and Martina attacked my sec oud serve and made some good Navratilova won the third set, 6-4, and later said: "I bave never seen anybody hit as hard as her. I can hit harder sometimes, but she hits hard all the time."

The raves from Navratilova were not necessarily fed into the computer, but the scores were. Soon Leand's name began spill-ing out of the computer faster than she could have predicted.

Automatically Qualified

After three tournaments, still as an amateur, she was ranked 29th on the circuit. That meant she could antomatically qualify for major tournaments, week af-

"The match against Martina showed my potential," Leand says. "As soon as I could get into the events, I wanted more experience on the circuit. 1 couldn't accomplish everything I wanted — academically, in college tennis and on the pro cir-She consulted her parents, her coach and a dean at Princeton and found them all supportive.

The dean said he realized I could get my degree later but you can't start a tennis career at 35," she said. Barely half that age, Leand

I've been all over Los Angeles [last week]. You give up a lot, but you gain a lot, too." Leand's gains have come faster than expected, even if she couldn't handle King last week. In her first tournament as a professional, she established herself as one of the biggest and the best of the "minis."

One of Baseball's Memorable Holdouts

Bo Belinsky vs. Los Angeles Angels — 20 Years Ago

LOS ANGELES — Fernando Valenzuela's money problems with the Los Angeles Dodgers has resurrected the memory of one of baseball's greatest salary holdouts

The holdout was unique because "I can understand why Mr. Fernando Valenzuela is going for all he can get." Belinsky said. "You can't blame the guy. I think he's for real. He's not the usual type of rookie. He's unusually talented, a gifted type of guy, along with being of Spanish descent. I don't think the Dodgers could pay him

"I was off to a better start than Fernando, I just couldn't maintain it. This young man has what he oeeds to get the job done. I think he'll be a valuable asset for the oext 7 to 10 years. He just has a tremendous amount of ability, you

"If I had the program when I was pitching that I have today, I could have been close to a 20-game winner. I just couldn't dedicate myself. I think this young man has that dedication. This is very inportant. I was more a suspect than a prospect. Fernando, I'd say, is a around the half-million mark. I think that's a fair price for both of them, you know what I mean?"

Belinsky, however, was a little worried about Fernando's recent

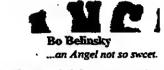

"I was a carefree guy in the ma-jors," he said, "and a lot of people said, Bo, take yourself more serious, get a wife and a family.'
Gradually it seeped in and I tried it. From a carefree guy, I married a Playmate of the Year, got serious and I became an alcoholic. I'm oot saying marriage caused my al-coholism, but I'll tell you, it sure pushed it in the right direction quickly.

"Then people said, 'Don't be so serious.' I had to go back to the old way of thinking. I always had the right idea. I just couldn't put it in the right perspective."
So his career was a flop, but his holdout was memorable.

Baseball players have made a lot of progress in the last 20 years, but a rookie like Valenzuela still finds himself following in Belinsky's footsteps: Fight for what you think you're worth, then sign for what they'll give you.

Valenzuela Goes Home HOUSTON (UPI) — Valenzue-la has accused the Dodgers of being inflexible in negotiations and has headed back to Mexico without signing a contract. In an interview Wednesday, Valenzuela told the Houston Chronicle that he would not sign the one-year, $350,000 contract of-fered by the Dodgers.

That oew tradition eventually will include night games at Wrig-ley Field, where so far the only light has been God's.

"Down the line, night games have to come," Green was saying now in his blunt, burly manner. "But there are so many other prob-lems that have to be faced first, night games will have to wait." But night games woo't have to

"I was 11 years old then," Green replied now when asked if he re-called that 1945 pennant, "I didn't know the Cubs existed." Not many people know or care that the Cubs exist now except for that cult which seems to cherish the team's tradition of failure and frustration. In reorganizing the franchise, Green has discovered that some Chicago people don't want him to make too many changes too quickly.

surprised those who remembered how the outspoken manager and the feisty shortstop had snarled at each other in Philadelphia. "But those people don't under-

The only feud I have with baseball players is when they don't give me their nickel's worth." Before the Cubs reported to spring training, each received a letter from Green. "I haven't talked to the team yet," be said. "When we cut to 25 players. I'll make some statements but I'm not going into the club-house to chew them out like George Steinbrenner does with the Yankees; it's Lee Elia's clobhouse." Elia, the Cubs' oew manager, was one of Green's coaches in Philadelphia. "I needed somebody I knew and I deeded somebody I knew and I deeded faith that he would be doing things my way," Green said. "Lee's been successful at all levels in baseball. He handles pitchers well, he handles kids well."

All of Green's changes are designed to provide the Cubs with the respect they haven't had in recent years.

"With the Phillies, we always knew we were going to beat 'em," he recalled. "We knew the Cubs either would beat themselves eventually or they'd create a situation we could take advantage of. I've talked about bow you could see the losers' look even in the Wrigley Field ushers, Losing permeates everybody. Losing shrinks people. Losing deteriorates people. Losing destroys people."

Green also has ordered cosmetic changes at Wrigley Field.

"it's been an old, dirty ballpark," be said. "It's still old, but we're cleaning it up, painting it, putting up some flags and putting in a Cubs Hall of Fame, but the ivy will be the same. Can't change the ivy. No reason to. Green ivy fits the

Witnessing Doomsday: Try to Remain Calm

NEW YORK — The unusual planetary alignment that occurred Wednesday had a lot of people expecting catastrophe. All nine planets were lined up oo the same side of the sun within a 96-degree arc. Why this should have terrified people is unclear, since it happened in 1803 without causing a cosmic mess, but it did. The China Youth Daily, for example, had to assure the Chinese that there was no chance the earth would suddenly stop spinning and fling everyone into space.

The New Delhi Sunday Herald was not so reassuring. It predicted a "strange epidemic affecting the abdomen," an earthquake and a "bad time for critical writers."

This last would hardly have been considered catastrophe by authors and playwrights, most of whom would be delighted to see a dozen critical writers suddenly flung off into space.

I hope this doesn't sound contempthous of all those people who were expecting catastrophe, be-cause it isn't meant to be. Expecting catastrophe is very sound policy. I wake up every morning anticipating catastrophe, and on days when it doesn't occur I go to bed feeling successful. Expect the worst and you'll be happy to settle for the humdrum is my theory. The question about people who expect the earth to stop spinning and heave them into space, or an earthquake to swallow Nepal, or icebergs to sink the Em-pire State Building, is whether they set their sights too high.

These are people expecting to be present at doomsday, I never set my catastrophe expectations that high. Doomsday is a big event in history. Expecting to be present is, in a way, giving yourself airs.

Oh, doomsday is catastrophe all right, but it's catastrophe with class. Have you ever wondered what it feels like to expect a catastrophe that grand, and have the fateful hour approach and then pass quietly, eventlessly, dooms-lessly? The sense of letdown must

AMERICA CALLING

A year or two ago a group of people assembled at the New York shoreline to await the arrival of angels who, their leader had assured them, would arrived that day to transport them to Paradise. They waited all day. The angels did oot arrive. After sunset they transported themselves back to houses they had left that morning with dreams of supping in Paradise. I can imagine a stage comedy that opens with a man returning home to Queens, forced to confess to his skeptical wife that he was oot special enough to merit a trip with the angels. Yet it is a sad kind of foolishness because it is about a person so full of the sense of human divinity that be overestimates his own importance in the great order of the cosmos.

Most of us lack the gift for foolishness on the noble scale required to assemble on a mountain and wait for the world to end at 12:22 p.m. Instead, when we think of doomsday at all it is in terms of thermonuclear explosions, yet there is a genuine argument whether this would be a true doomsday or merely a bad afternoon in international relations.

The U.S. government, through Civil Defense agencies tries to discourage us from giving our-selves airs about the possibility of being present at history's ultimate event. No, it insists, if the nuclear explosion occurs there is oo point exciting yourself about being present at doomsday. The important thing is to stay calm.

A manual of "relocation instructions" issued by Civil Defense au-thorities in Boston is wondrously calming in its suggestion of how life will go on. "Those living in the risk area who do not leave according to instructions," for example, "will be subject to strictly enforced curfews." And, "If you have a vacation cabin . . . go there as sooo as possible."

It makes World War III sound no worse than a fairly bad New England storm, which can be fun if you're well buttoned down with plenty of firewood by the hearth. Governments issuing this kind of advice strike me as being just as loony as oewspapers expecting unplanetary alignments to cause strange epidemics affecting the abdomen

30 Years After 'Invisible Man,' the Author Celebrates His Birthday and a New Edition

By Herbert Mitgang New York Times Service

NEW YORK — Ralph Ellison has just turned 68. Relaxing in his book-lined apartment on Riverside Drive above the Hudson River, he took time away from his electric typewriter to talk about his working life.
"My approach is that I'm an American writer," he said. "l write out of the larger literary tradition - which, by the way, is part Negro - from Twain to Melville to Faulkner. Another element I'm aware of is American folklore. And then all of this is part of the great stream of litera-

"Americans didn't invent the oovel. Negroes didn't invent poetry. Too much has been written about racial identity instead of what kind of literature is produced. Literature is color-blind, and it should be read and judged in a larger framework."
In March, 1952, Ellison's novel

"Invisible Man" was published, and Random House is marking the occasion this month by bring-ing out a 30th-anniversary edition, also being distributed by the Book-of-the-Month Club.

Since 1952, "Invisible Man' has gone through 20 hardcover and 17 paperback printings, a Modern Library edition and translation into 15 languages.

Essential Work

"Invisible Man" is recognized as an essential 20th-century U.S. literary work in just about every high school and college in the country. Anne Freedgood, a Random House editor, enjoys telling about a 17-year-old student she knows who recently learned that Ellison had not written a second novel. "How could he?" the young woman said.
"This novel has everything in it."

lt won the National Book Award in 1953. In 1965 about 200 authors, editors and critics polled by the New York Herald Tribune picked "Invisible Man" as the most distinguished novel written by an American during the preceding 20 years. The novel, which defies easy summary (it tells of a nameless black man's dilemma about his position in the white world), builds from one of the most memorable opening paragraphs in modern American fiction: "I am an invisible man. No. I am not a spook like those who

Ellison had been meaning to write a different novel, a war sto-ry, when be was seized by the notion of invisibility.
"I had come back on sick leave from my service in the Merchant Marine and, after a hospital stay, in the summer of 1945, my wife and I went to a friend's farm in Waitsfield, Vermont. Sitting in a lumberman's cabin looking at the hills, I wrote the first line of the book: 'I am an invisible man.' "Once the book was done, it was suggested that the title would be confused with H.G. Wells's old novel. The Invisible Man,' but I fought to keep my title because that's what the book was about. His novel doesn't have the article in its title, although the mistake keeps cropping up, and I've been telling people to drop the word 'the' ever since the book came out."

Ellison was born in Oklahoma City, educated at Tuskegee Institute, worked as a researcher on the New York Federal Writers' Project before World War II and hoped to enlist as a trumpeter (he still has a trumpet, but, he says, no lip anymore) in the Navy -"bnt they were not taking any more musicians. So, instead, I became a second cook on a Liberty

His experiences in Europe and his father's during the Spanish-American War led him to plan a novel that would show how Negroes (the word be usually uses rather than blacks in conversation, because of its historical roots) fought not only for their country but for their own recognition and rights.

That novel was focused on the experiences of a black U.S. pilot in a Nazi prisoner-of-war camp. The pilot became the spokesman for his white fellow-prisoners. The resulting racial tension was exploited by the camp command-er for his amusement. "My pilot was forced to find support for his morale in his sense of individual dignity and in his newly awakened awareness of buman lonelioess." Ellison notes in an introduction to the 30th-anniversary edition of "Invisible Man." But then "the spokesman for invisibility intruded" and he was captured by a richer theme that grew more out of himself - "the voice of invisibility issued from deep within our complex American underground."

A STATE OF THE PARTY OF THE PAR

Inevitably a talk with Ellison turns to his long-awaited third book, "Shadow and Act," a book of essays, came out in 1964, It can be reported that his second novel is progressing, and apparently it is working — certainly the author is. He has given the novel his full attention since he retired in 1980 as a Schweitzer Professor of Humanities at New York University.

Io the summer of 1967, 300 pages of the manuscript were lost in a fire at the Ellisons' home in the Berkshires. "After that, I began to reconceive some of the characters. Now we have a photocopier at bome, and I keep at least two copies of what I write."

Some Ellison fans, after waiting so many years, have won-dered if he had writer's block. "If so, it's a strange kind of thing, since I write all the time. The blockage is that I'm very careful about what I submit for publication. I learned long ago that it's better not to have some thing in print that you feel isn't ready. It's not a difficult thing to turn out more books. I had a hell of a lot more material that didn't get into 'Invisible Man.' It may be a wasteful way of writing but I'm careful about what is pub-

A strong metal file cabinet contains much of the manuscript of the untitled novel. He un-locked it for a visitor, pulled out the drawer and measured the sections of manuscript: It came to 19 inches.

"It looks long enough to be a trilogy," he said, smiling, "It all takes place in the 20th century. I'm convinced that I'm working with abiding patterns The style is somewhat different from 'Invisible Man.' There are different riffs in it. Sections of it are publishable and some parts have al-ready appeared" in literary re-

"The oovel has to be more than segments; it has to be a whole before it's ready for publication." He didn't say, nor was he asked, when. "But if I'm going to be remembered as a oovelist, I'd better produce it soon," be said cheerfully.
